SQL Tutorial - W3Schools

Database programming using SQL (T-SQL, PL/SQL) is left behind other programming languages. All the code is committed directly to code repository on the server. It is not possible to compile and run code locally. And there is no code version control built into popular databases. This means that, benefit of a cursor variable is that it enables passing the result of a query between PL/SQL programs. Without a cursor variable, you have to fetch all data from a cursor, store it in a variable e.g., a collection, and pass this variable as an argument. With a cursor variable, you simply pass the reference to that cursor.
